A novel with two stories set in Mexico, both violent and full of irony. Daniela, a private investigator, goes to Mexico to find a painting by Frida. Meanwhile Freddy, a journalist who writes about the Mafia, is laid out at home after being beaten up. He, too, is a student of Frida. The police are not only looking for the thief of the painting, but also investigating the murders of dancers, whose bodies appear at night tattooed with the words "by the hand of God". The next day an altar to the Holy Death is mysteriously destroyed. The three plots come together, while Frida's unknown painting tells its own story of her love for Trotsky.
