María spends a week writing to Alba about what is happening to her mother, who has been feeling rotten since her separation. Alba, in return, tells her about the weekends with her father, who has surprisingly become young again. Between them they think up a masterly plot to bring their parents together in the place where they first met. Maybe this will change everything! In this modern epistolary narrative – by e-mail – María and Alba come to have a slightly better understanding of their parents' situation, despite suffering from it.
