We don't choose our parents, or what we like, or what we're good at. We don't choose who we fall in love with... Or our enemies. We don't choose our talents, or weaknesses. We don't choose, so we don't choose even our sins. Or the country we're born in, or the name will be called by all the people we love, who we also do not choose. Life chooses us. And sometimes it doesn't even do that. This is the story of a man who will have to invent a world so as to exorcise his pain. And another who will offer his pain in exchange for inventing a new world. Of an orphan father and a lost child.
