A Greek journalist who has suffered the close of ERT television directly experiences the intrigue and misery that surround the closure of Europe's second largest public television service, purportedly due to the economic crisis. Immersed in the frenetic rhythm that marks the events, Andreas and Nora will be victims of a mistake that will make them a target of the far-right on both sides of the Mediterranean. With a daring mixture of reality and fiction, this crime novel leads us into the fears, malice and desires that sit together at the heart of southern European societies in crisis.
