"When he arrived in Brussels he started to hear about the idea of the end of the European dream through certain media channels." The protagonists of these stories find themselves in a situation disturbingly familiar to us: the Europe of the Twenty-first century, between the tourist developments that engulf the Mediterranean coasts, the insidious loneliness of hotel rooms and the routine of the suburbs. A world that is ours, in which the old signs of identity based on nationality and family or religious traditions seem to be disappearing. However, loneliness, doubts, the impulses that overcome the characters of "Solitary Undertaking" are as universal as a Greek myth, an Eskimo legend or a remote Yugoslavian curse.
