Adrián Díaz appears to be living the dream. He is about to play Hamlet on stage and is going to give up his job in the hospitality industry to dedicate himself full-time to his true vocation, acting. What almost nobody knows is that Adrián is "touched" or, in other words, suffers from obsessive-compulsive disorder. When he suffers his latest anxiety attack during a performance the director gives him an ultimatum: either he seeks professional help immediately or he'll be replaced by an understudy. Julia Whyler is a retired psychologist who specialised in obsessive-compulsive disorder. Now, reluctantly and still weighed-down by her traumatic past, she returns to public life to launch her first book. Their meeting will mark a key point in both their lives forever.
