A magical work, based on real events and with a very special atmosphere and characters; a splendid human landscape in which emotions blossom intensely. In Franco's Spain, Campos is a quiet village, with charming inhabitants, where the bar is the social centre and personal relationships and shared memories make solidarity a sign of identity. But this calm disappears when a project to construct a dam arrives from the distant capital, a project which could disrupt the roots of the whole village. Campos raises its voice against this injustice, but it is Eliseo Soler, the village poet, who particularly asks those whose job it is to respond the most essential questions. Additional information Prizes and reviews:

"Things always happen twice in history: first as a tragedy, then as material for fiction. This is a good novel by an author who notes small great styles. And her literature is not wide spectrum, but has a specific voice, whose centre of action is the inner self. Delicate as silk and, though damp, it is like a night dew without tears."- Qué Leer
