A fish called Yorick and a kitten called Montaigne. A young philosophy student who corners her old professor in the corridors of the faculty. Two teenagers who discover in their respective physical and moral deformities a good reason to get together. A young left wing militant woman who writes letters to Mao.

A psychological theory that explains everything. The Faculty of Philosophy at the University of Buenos Aires as an assemblage point from which the world shows itself. The world as a complicated bundle of impossible theories, illuminated and intangible: wild theories, for those who find themselves pedalling in the infinite 2.0 void.
