Sandra has decided to go to live in a village on the east coast of Spain: she has left her job and, pregnant, spends the days trying to put off the decision of what to do with her life. On the beach, she meets a Norwegian couple in their eighties who seem to be the solution to Sandra's problems. Julián, an old man, recently arrived from Argentina and a survivor of the Mauthausen concentration camp, watches the comings and goings of the Norwegians carefully. One day he stops Sandra and tells her the details of a story which, to her, sounds like the plot of a film or a documentary: horrors in black and white that have nothing to do with her. Although Sandra thinks Julián's tale sounds crazy, she begins to look at her friends with new eyes, re-assess their words and silences, without realising that the end of her innocence is putting her life in danger.
