Clara has been assigned to write a personal guide to Germany, and she convinces her husband to take some time off to travel with her through the northern part of the country. For her, this is an opportunity to finish a personal and inspired piece of work. For him, a Spanish man who has not lived in Germany for very long, it is the perfect opportunity to have a nice holiday, with the slight inconvenience of having to visit museums and the homes of famous writers... and every kind of bookshop where he has to ask for the only book his wife has published. A delightful marital comedy disguised as an on-the-road novel, an itinerant journal that provides an ironic and admiring view of German culture, but above all, a hilarious counter-chronicle of a trip with literary ambitions containing many wonderful scenes about the life of a couple and a family.
