A collection of ten titles, liberally illustrated in full-colour by well-known international illustrators. The stories, which are full of humour, are written by Enric Lluch. The main characters are animals and monsters from the infant imagination, related to fear (the witch, the wolf-man, the ghost, the vampire etc.). In addition to entertaining, the collection aims, with a great sense of fun and fantasy, to take the drama out of the role these terrifying beings have traditionally played for children. At the end of each story, the reader finds an amusing description of the monster in question, in the manner of a classical 'visual encyclopaedia'.
