'The wind spread the news. It stank of tragedy...' The civil war in Spain is over. Rome is in the hands of a single man: Julius Caesar. But his ambition is limitless, and he knows a place in the hills to the north where a secret is hidden that would guarantee him the power he aspires to, the gold of Galicia. And so he sends a select group of legionaries to ancient Galicia who, passing themselves off as gamekeepers, put an end to the wolves who are decimating the herds of the local tribes. However, something goes wrong. The last pregnant she-wolf is caught. And the male wolf will show no mercy to the men who killed his mate. He will hunt them to the heart of Rome itself and put an end to Julius Caesar's plans. A novel full of adventure and tension that explores the ancient battle between man and nature. An essential read. A novel whose protagonist is the wolf.
