A story of love and death in the border town of Portbou, 1990: a young woman is found hanged from a tree. She is wearing a white dress, like a bride, but no one knows who she is. The investigation finds that she had committed suicide, although the police are unable to identify the victim. Twenty-five years later, Inspector Garibaldi takes the case up again. Despite the years that have passed, he decides to go to Portbou. What he finds there are powerful networks of drug dealing, white slavery and political corruption, none of which make things easy for him. Garibaldi is aware that his is putting his life at risk, but he decides to carry on. Based on a real life case.
