Noah's mother has decided to stop breast-feeding her daughter. In order to explain the decision to her, she uses the allegory of a cloud of well-being. She explains to Noah that she has been accompanied by a cloud since the day she was born, and, over time, it has grown up, just like her. This cloud is very soft and colourful and is wrapped around Noah and will stay with her always. Noah's mother promises her that when she gives up breast-feeding for good, they will have a big party and there will even be candles to blow out, one for every month or year of breast-feeding. A wonderful story to help little children with a milestone they can find difficult and a helpful tool for mothers who are having trouble dealing with the process.
