Tirant lo Blanch is one most interesting and representative novels in world literature. It was written by a Valencian, Joanot Martorell, at a time when our language was spoken and written on all the routes across the Mediterranean. Through its pages you will take part in the military and romantic adventures of a knight who wanted to achieve one dream: to liberate Constantinople from its enemies. It has been described as a complete story because it talks about everything: customs, war, love . . . But what particularly stands out is its authenticity. Tirant conquers his enemies because he is intelligent and courageous. Its hero is made of flesh and blood: he attacks castles, but he also breaks a leg climbing down from the bedroom of his beloved Carmesina.
