A little girl likes a little boy, but the little boy doesn't notice her. He doesn't even look at her. What should she do? Her friends make all kinds of suggestions: she should get rid of her pigtails and her glasses, change her smile and her freckles, stop wearing her wings, be less of a chatterbox. The little boy has finally noticed her, but she's changed so much that even the birds don't land on her head anymore. The little girl realises that she is no longer herself and decides to reclaim her pigtails, her glasses, her smile, her freckles, her wings, her words...
