Legend has it that humans originally possessed four legs, four arms, two faces and a single head, and that the female and male sex coexisted in them; but Zeus, threatened by the strength of these beings, cast a lightning bolt at them, so dividing them in two and condemning them to live without their half and to wander in search of it to be complete. It might sound romantic if not for the fact that, as you can see, my best friend took that legend as a kind of creed and seemed determined that I should be part of her mission as well. By the way, I'm Nadia, an independent woman, extroverted, a bit of a geek and with a lot of character. And no, contrary to what my friend thought, I didn't want to find the man in my life. And yes, I know what you're thinking: this is the story of how I end up swallowing my own words...
