"I don't understand it one bit when Grandma says that Grandpa is worn out after so many years. One day at school we learned that stones wear out over time because of erosion. But Grandpa isn't a stone. Or is he? Sometimes it seems that way, like when he sleeps, because he doesn't even move a millimeter. " The winner of the Lazarillo 2015 award for best picture book returns with this tender, moving story about the passage of time, old age and death from a child's perspective. A unique story to encourage realistic, warm and sincere conversations with young readers about the loss of a loved one.
