The sales assistant of a pharmacy in one of the Madrid districts is raped and murdered. Inspectors Pacheco and Duarte, on the trail of a psychopath recently released from prison who is hanging around the area, receive a tip-off that he might have been threatening her and had visited her the week before the murder. What seemed an open-and-shut case becomes more complex when signs that Duarte himself might be the chief suspect begin to appear. As with all great of noir literature which casts doubt on established fact, José Ángel Mañas's new novel succeeds in communicating the suspect's sense of anguish to the reader with the backdrop of present day Madrid and the economic crisis.
