Arthur is the chicken felt uncomfortable inside his egg.
He had grown so much that this room had become too small.

Inside the shell, Arthur felt safe, but very squashed. He no longer fitted into this warm room with white walls, so he had no option left but to leave it. He then discovered that he inhabited a very small part of an enormous and unknown world which opened out in front of his surprised and curious eyes.

"Arthur" is a cardboard book for pre-readers and beginner readers which looks at the fragility of those who have just been born: how they feel, what are their first impressions of the environment they have arrived in, their fears and insecurities. It also reflects on the tenderness and protective instinct which the figure of the protagonist arouses in adult readers, defenceless against all that surrounds him, and facing a long process of learning.
